There is a common belief within Native American culture that states that all things have a relationship with one another; with this belief in mind, I created a piece that takes on a metaphorical representation of Idaho's natural world.

There are 'hidden' images within the heart, these represent both the history embedded within every rock, every tree, every plant, every drop of water and so on, in Idaho as well as our inherent connection to nature. This piece highlights the importance of protecting our rivers, canyons, forests, and wildlife, but also the history behind this land that is so often taken for granted and forgotten.
